RESonance

Where does the artwork end and our interpretation begin?

Looking is never a neutral act.

A form remains after we have stopped looking at it.
A colour alters the one we encounter next.

Meaning is never fixed. It is constructed in what happens between the artwork and the person looking at it, making the boundary between the two uncertain.

RESonance

The exhibition explores the uncertain boundary between the artwork and the gaze, and what happens when that boundary can no longer be clearly distinguished.

RESonance brings together works that move through nature, materiality and emotion using very different languages. Some retain a direct relationship with their subject; others preserve only traces of it - forms that feel familiar without becoming fully defined; others seem to withdraw from identification altogether, allowing colour to become the centre of the experience.

This distance is visible in the room. Less so once we begin to look. One image settles over another. What we have just seen enters what comes next. Correspondences emerge that no one has prescribed; proximities appear between works belonging to distant languages and imaginaries.

The works have not changed. Our gaze has.
The boundary shifts continuously between what is present in the work and what we project onto it. RESonance takes shape within this unstable territory, where what the works investigate continues to transform in the gaze of those who move through them.

Where do I end and the artwork begin?

Four practices. Different visual languages.
One field of perception.

Catherine Parra

LYON · PARIS · BARCELONA

Catherine Parra's practice is driven by a persistent need to make. Her paintings do not begin with a fixed image or predetermined composition, but with attention to what emerges through the process: an accident, a trace, an apparently insignificant detail in which she recognises a possibility.

Her long relationship with textiles, objects, materials and colour remains present in the physicality of her work. Before devoting herself fully to painting, Parra developed an experimental practice across fashion and design, progressively introducing pigment and painterly gesture into her creations.

Today, each painting follows its own logic. The process changes from one work to another; intuition, error and discovery determine its direction. Often, the strongest works begin precisely where control gives way to possibility.

.An error can become the beginning of a painting

Paolo Maria Agostini

ITALY · BARCELONA · CAPE TOWN

Paolo Maria Agostini is a self-taught abstract artist whose practice develops through intuition, movement and sustained attention to the world around him. Nature and introspection provide recurring points of departure, but the paintings are shaped less by representation than by the physical act of making.

Working on horizontal canvases and approaching them from multiple directions, Agostini allows composition to emerge through an immersive process guided by instinct. His alter ego, embodies curiosity, sensitivity and adaptability - qualities that also structure his artistic identity.

Based between Barcelona and Cape Town, his practice is informed by landscapes, cultures, encounters and ordinary moments. At its centre is an art of noticing: remaining present and receptive to what might otherwise pass unseen.

Lucía Cheves Dauber

GUATEMALA · BARCELONA

Lucía Cheves Dauber approaches art as a form of living memory. Her work emerges from the intersection of what is inherited and what is chosen: between cultural memory, personal experience and the elements we decide to carry forward.

Working with oil, acrylic, collage and mixed media, she builds images through layers that hold traces of ancestral knowledge, time, care and silence. Rather than illustrating heritage, her paintings create space for it to remain active - present even when it is no longer directly visible.

Her Mayan roots and a feminine perspective are not treated as fixed symbols, but as living material. Painting becomes a conversation between preservation and transformation, between belonging and the gradual act of letting go.

Rafael Nuesi

BARCELONA

Rafael Nuesi is a ceramic artist, designer and founder of Nuesi Ceramics, a contemporary ceramics studio based in central Barcelona. His work explores the relationship between art, design and function, approaching clay as a material through which matter can be transformed into objects with identity and permanence.

His practice moves between sculptural and functional pieces, with an ongoing investigation into form, texture and the balance between precision and spontaneity. Each work foregrounds the value of the handmade and the visible traces of process.

Alongside his studio practice, Nuesi has developed projects with Surarquía and collaborations with architecture and design studios including Jaime Beriestain, as well as with companies and institutions that integrate art and design into their spaces and experiences. Through Nuesi Ceramics, he advances a contemporary understanding of ceramics as a meeting point between creativity, craft and community.
